

THE LOCKDOWN MURDER

It was March 2020.

People were in a hurry to get everything they needed for the upcoming lockdown caused by the corona pandemic. So did Mary Hudson.

She was a 24-year-old woman and worked as a judge at the local court. The young lady went to a shopping center called the Stop Shop. Mary was on her way to the aisle with the toilet paper when she noticed, that there was only one packet left. Some other customers also wanted the toilet paper and three of them started running towards the shelf. Mary and two women struggled for it but Mary was the one who managed to get the package into her hands.

Suddenly there was a loud scream, Mary Hudson was lying on the floor.... dead. And the toilet paper was gone.

After the sales manager had noticed what had happened, she called the police right away.

Detective Justin Case and his assistant Inspector Ineda Clu started investigating. They checked the video control but at the time the murder had happened, the cameras had gone out for some seconds. A coincidence?

Everyone who had been in the supermarket had to be questioned. There were four suspects, Jennifer Grey, a doctor, Lewis Sunflower who was working for an IT-company, Harry Miller, a business man and Andrew White, a lawyer who had had a relationship with Mary a couple of years ago.

The investigators examined all the evidence and came to the decision that there was only one person who had a motive. They found out that Lewis Sunflower had already spent some time in prison and it was Mary who had judged him. In addition, he was the only one who had the knowledge to manipulate the security cameras.

He admitted everything and told the officers that he wanted revenge on Mary for sending him into jail and that he also needed that packet of toilet paper really urgent.

Lewis Sunflower got arrested a second time and Inspector Clu and Detective Case had solved another crime.

And what's the moral of the story? ... Panic buying can be really dangerous.
